

d(2), Part 2

An outline map of the state of Alaska, including the Aleutian Islands, is centered on the page. The map is white with a black border. Inside the map, the title text is centered.

A Report to the People of Alaska on the Land Promises
Made in ANILCA

20 Years Later...

Edited by J. P. Tangen

d(2), Part 2

*A Report to the People of Alaska
on the Land Promises Made in ANILCA*

20 Years Later...

Edited by J. P. Tangen

Published by the
Alaska Miners Association
3305 Arctic Boulevard, Suite 202
Anchorage, Alaska 99503
Phone: (907) 563-9229
Fax: (907) 563-9225

website: www.alaskaminers.org

Copyright © 2000 Alaska Miners Association

All rights reserved. No part of the contents of this book may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means without the written permission of the Alaska Miners Association.

ISBN 0-944780-14-5

Printed and bound in the United States of America

Production by Glacier House Publications
P.O. Box 92809
Anchorage, Alaska 99509-2809
Phone: (907) 563-4343
Fax: (907) 563-8448
email: glacierhouse@gci.net

Preface

Looking back over these past 20 years since the passage of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, I recall what my good friend, Senator "Scoop" Jackson said in a Senate floor speech during the debate on ANILCA: After more than 58 markups and hearings over two years, that this proposal was a "Balanced and reasonable proposal; a proposal which protects the most outstanding natural and wildlife resources to be found in our country, while at the same time helping to insure that Alaska's vast timber, mineral and energy resources will not be placed 'off limits'."

Alaskans have continued to fight for what was agreed to in the Act. From the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to Kantishna to Glacier Bay, wave after wave of assaults on the Act's protections have challenged the agreement.

The following pages highlight the history and some of the disappointments that Alaskans have witnessed over the past two decades.

U.S. Senator Ted Stevens